Furniture Repaired and Reupholstered For Fall.

WE would suggest to our customers that this is a seasonable time to have furniture repaired and re-covered. At no other period of the year can pieces needing renovation be as conveniently spared from the home. Moreover, we will not only repair and reupholster furniture, but also store the same until fall, returning it quite renewed, fresh, and elegant.

Our shops not being overcrowded at present, we are better able to offer greater concessions in prices—the very lowest consistent with the quality of the work.

Very attractive prices are offered on various lines of handsome, stylish and durable coverings, of which you have choice:

IN THE SOCIAL WORLD

Mrs. Roosevelt Entertains on the Mayflower.

RECEIVES ST. HILDA SOCIETY

President's Wife Acts as Hostess at Delightful Luncheon—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. C. Ernest Smith Announce the Marriage of Their Daughter—Washingtonians Presented to Prince.

Mrs. Roosevelt was hostess Saturday afternoon at a delightful luncheon which was given on board the government yacht the Mayflower. The members of the St. Hilda Society were the guests of honor. About thirty members of the society were taken to the yacht, which lay off Plum Point, from the Seawanhaka Yacht Club dock, in one of the Mayflower's tenders, while another tender took Mrs. Roosevelt from the W. E. Minn Roosevelt dock. For several years past Mrs. Roosevelt, who is a member of the society, has entertained the members in some enjoyable manner.

Mr. John W. Foster, former Secretary of State, who represented China at the peace conference at The Hague, arrived in New York Saturday on the steamer St. Paul.

Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Burke, of Appomattox, Va., announce the engagement of their daughter Betty to Mr. Benjamin Flory Oden, of the same place. The wedding will take place in the early fall.

Miss Burke is the daughter of Mr. Richard F. Burke, treasurer of Appomattox County, and cashier of the Bank of Appomattox, and is one of the most popular and attractive young women in Southside Virginia.

Mr. Oden is well known in Washington, having lived here for a number of years. He is a member of the Washington bar, and was secretary to former Senator Faulkner, of West Virginia. Mr. Oden is now engaged in the practice of his profession in Virginia, and is secretary to Representative Flood, of the Tenth Virginia district.

Announcement was made Saturday in Philadelphia that Mr. Horace M. Combes, a member of the Art Club, the City Club, the Umling Barge Club, and the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, is to be married October 10 to Miss Ellnor Welton, of Stavanger, Norway.

Mr. Combes met his Norwegian bride-to-be while traveling abroad this summer. After their marriage in the Cathedral at Stavanger, Mr. and Mrs. Combes will make a tour of the continent. They will reside in Philadelphia upon their return.

Rev. Dr. C. Ernest Smith and Mrs. Smith announce the marriage of their daughter, Miss Marcella Francis Smith, to Mr. George Francis Forbes, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Forbes, of Villa de Sales, Aquasco, Md. The wedding took place at the residence of the bridegroom's parents.

Many prominent Washingtonians were in Newport during the past week, and were presented to Prince Wilhelm of Sweden. Among these were Baron Rosen, the Russian Ambassador; Mr. George von L. Meyer, Postmaster General; former Secretary Leslie M. Shaw, and Mr. Theodore P. Shonts. They were presented by Mr. Lagercrantz, the Swedish Minister.

The Medical Association met at the home of Dr. Fremont Smith, at Bar Harbor, last week, when papers were read by Dr. Smith, of Washington, and Dr. Robert Amory, of Boston.

Mrs. Herbert Parsons, of Washington, occupied a box at the opening of the Bar Harbor horse show last week.

Miss Susie E. Love and Mr. Leon S. Cooper, both of Washington, were married in Wilmington, Del., August 15, by Rev. S. N. Pichard.

Mr. and Mrs. Everett Partridge are in New London, Conn., for a six weeks' stay, and will return to their home in Fairmont street about September 12, after making a stay at Asbury Park.

Mr. and Mrs. August Belmont gave a dinner Saturday evening to a few guests at the Race Track Club House, Saratoga.

Miss Wilson, of Washington, is the guest of Mrs. Theodore M. Davis, at Newport, R. I.

Miss Nannie Randolph Selden is the guest of Mrs. George Ambrose Allen, in Erie, Pa.

Mr. and Mrs. John Washburn, together with Miss May, Miss Elizabeth, and Sydney Washburn, of Washington, have arrived in Paris from Berne, Switzerland.

At every camp in the Adirondacks house parties are being entertained. Rear Admiral William Sheffield Cowles, U. S. N., and Mrs. Cowles, Mr. and Mrs. William Douglas Sloane, and Miss Burden being among the guests of Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, at Camp Wilder.

Gen. Charles F. Manderson, former Senator from Nebraska, and Mrs. Manderson are spending the summer at Poland Springs House, Poland Springs, Me. Gen. and Mrs. Manderson, whose home is in Omaha, spent several weeks in Washington last spring.

Mrs. Larz Anderson, during the absence of Mr. Anderson, who is in Europe, is visiting Mrs. Nicolas Anderson.

The Casino at Newport will be the scene to-night of a ball to which all society will flock. Even Mrs. Ogden Mills and her daughters, who, as a rule, avoid anything in the form of a subscription ball, will lend their presence. Tickets to the affair will be $10 a piece. The dance has been organized in connection with the national tennis tournament, which was played last week. The committee in charge consists of R. Livingston Beckman, Harold A. Sanborn, Henry A. C. Taylor, Jr., William Spencer, J. R. Barton.

Miss E. C. Topham recently left the city for Deadham, Mass., where her ancestors lived during the 16th period. Miss Topham is one of the first newspaper women who came to Washington. She was here in 1863, and in 1867 commenced her work for the New York papers.

A Pretty Style for a Wash Dress.

The prettiest of the new tub dresses are simply made and trimmed as daintily as desired. Here is sketched a dress having tucks to yoke depth in waist and skirt, simple enough for frequent tubbings, and exceedingly practical and becoming. It often happens that one might have more dresses of so much lace and other trimming were not needed for their beauty, and here is an idea for a very charming dress with tucks instead of trimming. The neck may be finished high or as shown, and the sleeves may be long or short. The deep tucks of the skirt are more fashionable than ruffles this year, and serve to hold out the hem prettily. A lawn, chambray, swiss, organdie, gingham, or pongee might be made in this manner. 74 yards 2 1/2 inches wide being needed for the medium size. Sizes, 12, 14, 16 years.

A pattern of this may be obtained by enclosing 10 cents in stamps and addressing Pattern Department, The Washington Herald, 734 Fifteenth street northwest, giving number (2620) and size wanted.

Teddy Bear Taft Inn.
During the past week a well-known literary woman, deprived of an income, has been looking about town, trying to select a good site for a "Teddy Bear Inn." She says she may call it a "Teddy Bear Taft Inn," reserving the right to add or subtract at any time to suit the occasion.

Self-made man (to highly educated grandson)—Well, Teddy, my boy, what do you learn at school?
Teddy—Latin and Greek and French and algebra.
Self-made man—He, indeed! And what's the algebra for—cabbage?

MEMOIRS OF RISTORI

Greatest Actress of the Nineteenth Century.

POETS' AND PATRIOTS' FRIEND

Her Recent Death, at the Age of Eighty-four, Adds Significance to This Autobiography—Many Anecdotes of Celebrities and Her Own Analysis of Many Plays.

When Mme. Ristori wondered whether her memoirs would receive a welcome in the United States, it was a complete proof of the true humbleness of her spirit, for she had received from the beginning of her career the untempered enthusiasm of the sovereigns and all the literary geniuses of her time, not only of her own country, but of the lands she visited. Her memoirs are published now, in a handsomely illustrated volume, by Doubleday, Page & Co., New York.

Ristori did not have to resort to the stage for the romantic episodes of life. They were the everyday happenings in her experiences as a private individual. Her romance with the charming young Italian nobleman, the Marquis Capranica del Grillo, is one of those idyls which grace the course of the lives of unusual men and women. It was a repetition of the course of true love. The family of the marquis objected, and so the young couple took the reins into their own hands, and going to the village church as the priest was saying mass, they were there made man and wife. It was necessary for them to separate immediately, as the bride was playing in Florence, but the young husband, unable to bear the separation, disguised himself as a truck driver, and, buying a passport from a dancing master, crossed the frontier in a hired cabriolet. He arrived in Florence in time to see his wife winning her laurels from the stage-loving people of Florence.

Secured a Pardon.

One of the many episodes in Ristori's life which showed her great influence as a public character occurred in Spain. While playing "Medea" at Madrid, Ristori chanced to hear of a soldier who was condemned to death. She interested herself in the case, and after the entire municipality had failed to win his pardon from the queen, Ristori's influence succeeded. Her description of her audience with the queen and her impassioned appeal for the condemned man's freedom is exceedingly dramatic.

"I was soon ushered into her presence; the good queen asked to be excused for having kept me waiting, and for her emotion. All the ministers surrounded her. Without using any time I threw my arms at her knees. I kissed her hand she had extended to me and exclaimed: 'Your majesty, I ask mercy for Chapado!'

By moved by our prayers. He has erred. It is true, but in this one instance he has done good. He has saved a man. He acted after a bloody assault, unjustly made upon him in the presence of his companions. Grant life to a devoted subject, who is brave and ready to shed his blood for his queen! If my humble merits have ever had the good fortune to win your majesty's sympathy, grant me the pardon which I beg with pleading hands! * * * If your majesty will deign to express to him the impulses of your generous heart, he is human, and certainly will not have the courage to oppose your wish." At that moment, Narvaez stepped forward and bowed his head in assent. Then, the queen, grasping my hands, said to me: "Well, my lady, yes. * * * We pardon him!"

"Hearing the noise made by the audience which was anxious to have the performance resumed, and with my heart full of joy, I took leave of her majesty."

Invites Players to Sweden.
He laughingly stated that this had been expected, but that in return for the trophies the Britons had taught his countrymen much good tennis, and had done considerable toward popularizing the game in Sweden, where it was fast finding favor and developing some excellent players, who would, later on, thought, visit England and capture some of the British prizes. The prince said that Swedish lawn tennis players would welcome Americans, and left a general invitation for some of them to visit his country, as the lessons they would impart would be valuable.

Attends Mrs. Fish's Dinner.
During the morning Prince Wilhelm and his suite attended divine worship at the Swedish Methodist Church, after which service the prince held an informal reception on the lawn of the church, which was attended by several hundred of the Swedish residents of the city.

At noon the prince was the guest at a farewell dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish at their summer home, "Crossways," and, with this, the social entertainments in honor of the prince came to an end.

Late in the afternoon the prince and his suite boarded Senator Nelson W. Aldrich's steam yacht and were taken to Warwick, where a dinner was given by Senator Aldrich. The party later continued on to Providence.

The Swedish cruiser Fylgia leaves for New York to-morrow.

Upon the eve of the final matches which will decide the championship in singles the players about the courts and club to-day have been discussing the subject of the champions playing through in future tournaments, and the prospect of international competitions next year.

The first topic, and one which has received more attention this season than heretofore, was the outcome of the discussion as to whether William A. Larned, or Clarence Hobart should be the better chance of winning his way through to become the challenger of William J. Clothier, holder of the national title. With Larned as the victor it was the general opinion that the old system would remain as it is, while with Hobart, or if one of the younger players were successful, the chances of a change were regarded as more likely.

THE TARPAULIN BED.

I have heard men wish for a downy couch, But make for me no such bed; Just spread out the old tarpaulin wide, With the slatted legs at my head, And then, in my starchy chamber free, Just let sweet sleep drift down to me.

The bed of roses that some folks seek Is a thorny affair at best; There's aught like a couch in the open space Where cool winds whisket about, Come calm or storm, come wind or rain, You'll sleep without dreams till 'tis day again.

So lead me not to those city walls Where Ease holds a man a seif; But always, I pray, let my couch be made For out on the downy turf. 'Tis there it comes, like a soft caress— The sleep that spells forgetfulness.

Thompson Pharmacy Frank C. Henry, Prop., 703 15th St.

aids-de-camp of the king were awaiting us. They were blond, fine-looking young fellows, wearing a uniform like that of European soldiers, adorned with silver embroidery. They led us through a very simple vestibule to the house, a one-story structure. The doors of the reception hall were open, two domestics, clad in blue livery trimmed with silver braid, held back the drapery while we entered a large room upon whose walls hung the portraits of all the monarchs of the world. King Victor Emmanuel, from the height of his frame, seemed to welcome us. Quickly our expectations of meeting some 'savages' were shattered. When his majesty, Kaiser's son, moved forward, graciously holding out his hand, our ideas of grotesque savages were dispelled. The king, who was somewhat dark in complexion, was rather tall, wore a Prince Albert coat, and had side whiskers like an Englishman. He had a pleasant physiognomy and the simple manners of a perfect gentleman. He spoke to us in correct English, and one of his first questions was whether we liked the two-step better than the old-fashioned waltz. The lunch, which was served on fine Sevres porcelain tableware, and the cutlery was of the finest silver. In order to excuse the absence of the queen, the king himself condescended to tell us that she was in the woods. That was the only note to remind us of the local 'color.' The table was exquisite and the conversation most interesting, as besides our consul, we had with us Judge Allen, of the United States, who had been our companion on the steamer from San Francisco.

"When lunch was over the king offered me his arm for a tour in the garden, where all the rest of the guests followed us. In the garden, there was a pavilion from which we heard the strains of our national music. The king was moved by such kind attention. How sweet are such remembrances of our fatherland, in far away countries!"

Ristori as an Art Critic.

It goes without saying that a woman who could so artistically interpret the dramatic masterpieces of Shakespeare, Schiller, and Racine would be equally endowed with a critical faculty for putting her interpretations into words as well as into acting. This Ristori has done in a most charming and interesting manner, and which form the second part of her memoirs, will take their place among the most valuable monographs on the drama that have been written. This portion of the book is devoted to Ristori's appreciations of the great plays in which she made her fame: Schiller's "Mary Stuart," Goethe's "Egmont," Shakespeare's "Hamlet," "Macbeth," "A Midsummer Night's Dream," and Racine's "Phaedra." In these studies, Ristori gives not only an impersonal critical analysis of her subject, but, what is infinitely more valuable, describes their effect upon her as their interpreter. It is not the critic alone who speaks, but the actress as well. We are literally taken behind the scenes and shown the inner workings; and it is this personal note throughout which gives the book of atmosphere to the Ristori reminiscences, which would be quite impossible in a work written by one who was merely a critic.

Honors She Won.

On Ristori's eightieth birthday (January, 1902) a hundred theaters gave on the same date honor to one who had been the greatest artist of her day. Special newspapers were printed, and medals coined, the latter encircled by these words: "To Adelaide Ristori, the glory of Italian dramatic art, and of the Italian name, on her eightieth birthday, the Minister of Public Instruction offers this memorial." Not less than 3,000 telegrams were delivered to the noble woman, headed by almost all the sovereigns of Europe. The government took part, and the Queen and King went to the theater, while the King personally visited her in the morning at her residence.

Ristori's death occurred at dawn on the 9th of October, 1905. At the last moment there were present only her daughter, Marchioness Bianca, her nephew, Marquis Alexander, and Dr. Cuija. Her head, reclining on a pillow, was covered with the characteristic little curls of her hair, which were edged with black silk which she always wore at home, and during her illness they never took it off. Her hands held a cross; many flowers were strewn over the bed.

"The death of Ristori is the mourning of Rome and of the whole nation," with these words, spoken at Ristori's grave, the "Memoirs" come to a fitting close; a remarkable record of a remarkable artist, who through her art immortalized among the great tragedies of literature, and gave to the world the inspiring example, not only of a great genius, but of an equally great and noble woman.

FROM WOMAN'S POINT OF VIEW

No sensible person attempts to deny the many advantages of exercise for women, but a word of caution is necessary, as doctors know, for some women are unbalanced and feel the limitations of sex. There are forms of exercise unsuited to women, for talk as we may, we cannot get away from the fact that there is much difference in the physical construction of the bodies, women being more delicately built because of their mission on earth, that of motherhood.

Can you imagine women being subjected to the hard knocks of the game of baseball, and not receiving permanent injuries? Yet there are advocates of that form of exercise for us, but not in the medical profession. It is needless to say. We have a good list from which to select without attempting dangerous feats, chief and best of which is walking. The woman who insists upon her daily walk, in all weathers, taking it at a brisk pace, and with the body properly clad and carried, will have no fault to find with her general health. English women, whom we admire for their strength and good looks, regard walking with the highest respect as breathing, a necessity. They have horses and autos, but they never take the place of the tramp in the country.

American women walk only when they have to, the humble preferring trolleys and the rich traveling in their own vehicles, save when they wish to get rid of surplus flesh, in which case they take to long walks. Riding, driving, tennis, golf, fencing, boating, and swimming all appeal to women, and are quite enough to take all one's spare time without seeking more daring diversions, yet we see girls continually seeking for novelties and willing to accept them in any form.

When we see women of seventy-five so averse to losing their daily walk as to utilize an insignificant piazza in bad weather, the young among us should feel some shame for the indolence that keeps us in soft chairs in stuffy rooms. There is a large class of such women, and they are putting dollars in the pockets of physicians who do not hesitate to tell them the truth. They need fresh air more than medicine, fresh air, sunshine, exercise, and nothing but healthy food. Of which some women lack, and not from necessity.

It is impossible for all men and women to get out of hot cities when they please, but it is quite possible to make life more bearable than many find it. Simple clothing, fresh air, and plenty of bathing, and the elimination of all unnecessary tasks are sensible summer rules, yet we find women who seek the hottest days for shopping, who run fires in kitchen ranges all day to secure continuous hot water and cook heavy meals, who wear elaborate clothing that means hours of the washtub and ironing-board for hapless mortals, and who keep up the rigid housekeeping rules of winter in many other ways.
